Hollywood Glitz comes to Trowbridge Town Hall

The red carpet will be rolled out for a First Night Movie Premiere event at Trowbridge Town hall on Friday, 21st September. Celebrity reporters and paparazzi will be there to watch the guests arrive for an invitation only screening of local artist, Meg Mosley's cinematic homage to her astonishing grandmother, Veronica Orr, who was affectionately known as Gogs. The evening will also be filmed as part of Meg's new film Viva Trow Vegas.

The film is titled, Agog: The Grandmother Diaries and has been seven years in the making. It documents Meg's deepening understanding of her aging grandmother's determination to enjoy life to the full despite failing health and increasing vulnerability. Sadly Gogs died very recently but this Premier event will show that her spirit still lives on. It's an all community affair – the security guards are local body builders, the hostesses are local models and the guests are all hometown divas dressed up in their finery to make sure that Trowbridge is turned into tinsel town for the night.

Meg is a London trained artist whose work explores the meaning of celebration, glamour and their salience of the human spirit. She has chosen to live and work in Trowbridge because it is such a colourful source of inspiration for her work about how people come together and feel part of a vibrant community. Agog: The Grandmother Diaries is part of a much larger project for the Jerwood Visual Arts Project Space gallery in London. The London show will include a work entitled, Viva Trow Vegas that will include a film and photographs of the most glitzy event at the Trowbridge Arts Festival.

Tracy Sullivan, organiser of the arts festival says, 'We are thrilled to have Meg play such a key part in the first festival. We lose a lot of our local talent to cities where they feel more able to thrive as artists and the fact that Meg has remained committed to Trowbridge and that she makes such wonderful films is something worth celebrating.'

If you would like to attend the evening as a guest email contact@trowbridgeartsfestival.co.uk tell us why you would like to come and Meg may add you to her special guest list.
